As I write this, I’m sitting on the beach in a little slice of Florida. It’s less than a week since the latest school shooting — the latest one happened on Valentine’s Day at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida. Seventeen lives were lost but countless lives were changed.

Perhaps one of the most astounding statistics was that this was the 18th school shooting of 2018. Wait a minute – 18 school shootings since January 1st, 2018? Yes – this isn’t a typo. In the first 44 days of 2018. There have been school shootings in Seattle, WA, Los Angeles, CA, San Bernardino, CA, Sierra Vista, AZ, Maplewood MN, Dearborn, MI, St. Johns, MI, Benton, KY, Denison, TX, Italy, TX, Marshall, TX, Gentilly, LA, Mobile, AL, Winston-Salem, NC, Philadelphia, PA, Oxon Hill, MD, and Bronx, NY.

There are many theories as to why there are so many school shootings but as health care providers, we can’t help but think about the Mental Health Systems Act (MHSA) of 1980.

In October 1980, then President Jimmy Carter signed the MHSA. Once enacted, the MHSA would continue the federal community mental health centers program and it also included a provision for federal grants “for projects for the prevention of mental illness and the promotion of positive mental health.” The MHSA was considered landmark legislation in mental health care policy.

But the MHSA was not to be. In November 1980, Ronald Regan was elected president and he repealed the MHSA shortly after. Was this the start of today’s mental health care provider shortage?

President Trump has offered some funding for mental health programs including spending $10 billion to address “opioids and serious mental illness.” This includes funding for block grants to allow states to address mental illness and new support for mental health measures supported by the medical community.

But policy experts in the area of mental health have opined that this is not enough. Furthermore, the demand for psychiatric services has escalated. The National Council for Mental Health published a report in March 2017 that evaluated the need for psychiatric services.

This report found many issues regarding the lack of available mental health services. For example, the lack of health care services has resulted in significant delays to treatment. This leads to reduced quality of care, low patient satisfaction, poor patient outcomes, reduction in the workforce and higher costs. Outpatient mental health care providers have an overcrowded schedule with shorter appointment times that are scheduled back to back.

In hospital emergency departments (EDs), lack of access to psychiatric services stands out among all other medical diagnoses, averaging up to 23 hours for some dispositions. The resulting extended waits impacts the full scope of care in the ED.

Hospital beds have been eliminated due to lower rates of reimbursement compared to other medical or surgical procedures and due to difficulty recruiting psychiatric mental health care providers to staff the inpatient units.

Contact your legislator today and advocate for more funding for mental health services and mental health care providers.

When I applied to my doctorate program (BSN-DNP), I had only one full year of experience on a telemetry unit. I always knew I wanted to pursue higher education after my BSN but did not expect to embark on my doctorate journey so close to finishing nursing school. I remember receiving the acceptance letter and being mixed with excitement and extreme anxiety. I was now not only preparing to enroll in a graduate program full time but also continue working at my nursing job full time.

At orientation, a moment really stood out. One of the professors told us that this experience would change us. She stressed how we would leave this program a completely different person. She said the experiences would test us and push us to develop a new version of ourselves. I’m sure I wasn’t the only one who did not truly believe her. I had already gone through very transformative experiences in my four-year bachelor’s program and transition into a new nurse. Those experiences tested me mentally, physically, and emotionally. I could not yet see the growth potential I still had.

Fast forward to where I am now, preparing to graduate in May, I can say with absolute certainty that she was right. The doctorate journey will test you in a way undergraduate nursing and a new nursing job does, but aids in developing you in ways not experienced before. So, I will share some helpful words of wisdom to help future doctorate students about to embark on this journey.

There are three main things to remember and truly work on to make it through the demands of a doctorate program while balancing your job, family and social life. The first is learning how to ask for help. This is a hard thing for many nurses, I know. When you start working as a new nurse, and then again as a graduate student, you need to learn how to delegate responsibilities. Delegate household chores to your partner or children, ask parents to help with your kids or your pets on days you need to study or work late, and do not turn away help when it is offered. You will become overwhelmed with the amount of work and time it consumes from your daily life and help is necessary to complete routine tasks like grocery shopping, laundry or cooking. The sooner you ask for help and accept it, the more time you can dedicate to your studies without feeling overwhelmed.

The second pearl of wisdom is to find a support system within your cohort or program. That can be a professor or group of students, regardless of who it is, find someone who understands what you are going through and will be there to help you get through it. There will be a time when you do not perform as well as you wanted on an OSCE, or you fail an exam. You will need these people to keep you on track and push you to keep trying. The doctorate journey is very unique and there is no one who will understand it better than your classmates or faculty. Not everyone in your life will support your journey; co-workers or family members may question why you are choosing to go back to school. It is those peers and professors who understand your motivation in your doctorate journey that will be the ones to remind you to continue, even when you have moments that you just want to quit.

My last piece of advice is to find time to do something for yourself. You will become consumed by attempting to balance work, life and school. Asking for help will help this balance but it doesn’t take away the need for you to find time for yourself. You need to dedicate time doing something that makes you happy and healthy, at least once a week. This can be as simple as taking thirty minutes from your day, a few days a week, to exercise, go for a run or walk the dog. It can be in the form of taking a relaxing bubble bath, going to paint night with friends or going to dinner with your partner. Regardless of what it is, it needs to be for you and your mental and physical health. Even though this is mentioned last, this step is the most important because we cannot make it through the demands of daily life and help others if we do not take care of ourselves first.

I hope this can help you through your doctorate journey. The BSN-DNP is a new path in nursing and I choose to be a trailblazer! Surround yourself with others who are going through the same experience and understand how you are feeling. All the emotions, the stress, and trials are transformative, and at the end of this journey you will be a different person than the one who started the program. Be proud of your choice to pursue this demanding degree and utilize the three steps to help make it through your experience a little easier.

February 2018 Survey Results: Sustaining the DNP after graduation.

The February 2018 survey requested feedback from graduates to gauge their thoughts on how the DNP degree is being applied to practice after graduation. The majority of respondents see an improvement in practice as a result of earning this degree. See what you think.

Question 1: The theme of the 2018 National DNP Conference is sustaining the DNP: Strategies for the Future in Clinical and Administrative Practice. In my experience doctorally prepared practice is sustaining the foundations of DNP education?
72% very much to absolutely, 28% somewhat to not at all

Question 2: My practice improved as a result of my professional contributions secondary to DNP educational preparation?
76% very much to absolutely, 24% somewhat to not at all

Question 3: Regardless of my role (clinical or administrative) I see trends that indicate an improvement in practice is taking place as a result of the DNP prepared nurse.
73% very much to absolutely, 27% somewhat to not at all

Question 4: I appreciate the benefits of strategies started as a DNP student in my practice setting.
70% very much to absolutely, 30% somewhat to not at all

Question 5: I see that practice improvements are more sustainable by my actions as a DNP prepared nursing professional.
76% very much to absolutely, 24% somewhat to not at all

What do you think? Do these findings reflect your point of view?

The Doctors of Nursing Practice organization could not exist without the contributions and efforts of volunteers and interested groups to help advance the caliber and quality of the DNP prepared professional. There are numerous organizations throughout the country that strive to accomplish the same goals as others regionally and nationally. We at DNP Inc. are proud to be a part of the processes that support and enhance the professionalism of all involved.

The mission of DNP Inc. is to improve health care outcomes by promoting and enhancing the doctorally prepared nursing professional. This is accomplished through multiple channels and opportunities including: Annual Conferences, Continuing Education, Scholarly Practice Project Repository, Listing of DNP Programs, DNP Foundation, and the DNP Online Community. All are welcomed to participate in any and all of these services to assure the on-going growth and development of the discipline and improved outcomes resulting from the skills and talents of doctorally prepared nursing professionals.

The repository of scholarly practice projects continues to grow while we are in the process of inviting speakers to this year’s National DNP conference. Join in and see which service is best to support your efforts.

JOIN OUR FACULTY!

The Capstone College of Nursing at The University of Alabama (UA) invites applications for full-time faculty positions at the rank of Assistant or Associate Professor. With an enrollment of over 2,200 nursing students, we offer traditional BSN and RN-to-BSN programs. At the master’s level, we offer programs for case managers, clinical nurse leaders, nurse administrators, and nurse practitioners. We also offer doctoral programs leading to Doctor of Nursing Practice (DNP) and Doctor of Education for Nurse Educators (EdD) degrees.

A doctorate in nursing or related field is required. Preference will be given to candidates with an established program of research and/or current advanced practice experience. For the nurse practitioner concentration, certification as a Family Nurse Practitioner and/or Psychiatric Mental Health Nurse Practitioner is required.

With our winning traditions in athletics and academics, The University of Alabama has been ranked among the top 50 public universities by U.S. News and World Report for more than a decade. Forty percent of our freshman class scored 30 or higher on their ACT exams; and we have more than 600 national merit scholars enrolled. Our university placed 58th in the Forbes list of top U.S. employers, for all sectors of employment.

We are located in Tuscaloosa, a vibrant college community of 160,000, with a moderate climate. Our campus has been ranked as one of the most beautiful campuses in America. Come join us for a stimulating work environment and a great quality of life.
